

Poetry Porch: Poetry

On My Patio Nonetheless

By Robert K. Johnson

At the very end
of darkening autumn—
the trees now bare,
the air resolutely
cold and grey—

comes the surprise
of a bright rose
clinging to its bush's
lowest branch,
so, too, can love come.